

Change of Editorial Board

The Journal of Computational Mathematics (JCM) is an international journal covering numerical methods, analysis and applications. It was founded by the late Professor Kang Feng in 1983.

The purpose of this note is to draw attention to changes in the membership of editorial board displayed on the inner cover of this issue of JCM. After serving on the editorial board for many years, a number of members, including several of the founding members, will retire from the board. I am sure that the computational mathematics community will join me in expressing our deep gratitude to them for their strong support of JCM over the past years. I am also pleased that several international leading scholars in computational mathematics have kindly accepted my invitation to join the new editorial board of JCM. Our aims are to set a higher standard for the Journal and to achieve its publication in a more timely fashion. You may also notice that from 2007 JCM will be published jointly by the Institute of Computational Mathematics, Chinese Academy of Sciences in Beijing, and Global Science Press in Hong Kong. I would like to take this opportunity to acknowledge the efforts made by VSP/Zeist, the Netherlands, in the last twenty-three years. The new website of this journal is <http://www.global-sci.org/jcm>.
